I am currently serving as a Professor of Linguistics at the College of Languages and Translation, Najran University, Saudi Arabia, where I have gained extensive academic, research, and administrative experience. I have taught a wide range of undergraduate and postgraduate courses in linguistics, applied linguistics, translation, and English language studies, with a strong emphasis on fostering critical inquiry and integrating research-informed pedagogy. In addition to my teaching responsibilities, I have held several key administrative and leadership positions, including the Academic Advisor and the Chairman of the Scientific Committee at the College of Languages and Translation, Najran University, Saudi Arabia, and previously served as Dean of the Center for Languages and Translation and Dean of Libraries at Ibb University, Yemen. My research interests encompass linguistics, applied linguistics, translation, and English language teaching. I have published extensively in reputable journals indexed in the Web of Science and Scopus databases, authored a scholarly book on morphosyntax, and supervised numerous MA and PhD theses, in addition to serving as an external examiner and academic promotion evaluator for several universities across the region.
